The Scottish Gaelic Language

Scottish Gaelic is a Celtic language spoken by approximately 60,000 people in Scotland. It is one of the two official languages of Scotland, along with English. Scottish Gaelic is closely related to Irish Gaelic and Manx Gaelic and is part of the wider Celtic language family.

Scottish Gaelic was once the main language of Scotland, but its use declined after the Act of Union in 1707, which united Scotland and England. Scottish Gaelic is now spoken mainly in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, although there are also significant numbers of speakers in other parts of the country.

There are a number of reasons for the decline of Scottish Gaelic. One reason is the influence of English, which has become the dominant language in Scotland. Another reason is the loss of traditional Gaelic-speaking communities, such as crofting communities in the Highlands and Islands.

Despite the decline in its use, Scottish Gaelic is still a vibrant and living language. There are a number of organizations working to promote the language and there are a growing number of people learning Scottish Gaelic.
